"CI GIT"

In the morning, the sun cast its gleaming rays upon the frozen land, awakening the silent horizons with its warmth.

The wolf too awakened, shaking the snow from his burnished coat where it had gathered the night before.

Warily, he set out into the northern dawn, stepping into a world which had met its doom in blinded avarice and needless want, irresistible forces of human nature. He knew not of the wrath, more so ignorance, that held the earth in its murderous grip and had begun its assault upon his world.

Onward he travelled, defining his trail crisply in the white of the morning, without hope of escape.

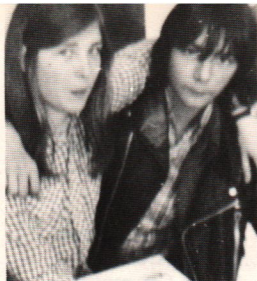

From the south it came, slowly creeping forward, devouring all in its path, inching its teeth into the throat of the land, tearing at the flesh with rapacious claws, and death enveloped the wolf. The claws raked and scratched ever deeper until the blood flowed and the land pitched and yawed helplessly.

Nor did the horror cease, until in its shortsighted greed, the killer too perished and sank into silence, too late to prevent what it had done.

Homework

When I do my homework at night
 I look at the math sums and get a fright
 I wish I could go out and play
 But my mother says that I must stay.
 My history assignment is due tomorrow
 But someone else's I'll have to borrow.
 Oh! I wish there was no school
 Even if I turned out a fool.
